

ANKERWYCKE BURNED DOWN

Historic English Mansion Destroyed
During Absence of Owners.

LONDON, Sept. 18.—Ankerwycke, the historic mansion at Wraysbury, where King Henry VIII. wooed Anne Boleyn, was destroyed today by fire. The owners were absent and the cause of the fire has not been ascertained.

The house was built around the ruins of one of the most famous priories of the Middle Ages, founded in the reign of Henry II. Adjoining the property is Runnymede Meadow, where the barons forced King John to grant the Magna Charta.
